The stream cut away nearly two hundred feet of land noar that town, including a strip of land known as the Point, and which has heretofore protected the place. The main current now strikes the town almost directly from the north. It will probably be only a question of a few hours before the current has full sway at East Atchison and then no power can save the place from being swept away.

Great excitement prevails, and many persons have moved to this ride of the river for safety. Store buildings and houses which stood in the north end of the village are being torn down or moved by their owners. Many buildings have been moved, and laborers and teams from this city and from the surrounding country assisted in the work.

The officials are now beginning to believe that an organized gang is at work, as appearances indicate that more than one person must have been concerned in the latest robbery.

The station was broken into during the night and Koo worth of tickets stolen. The weighing machine was smasshed and the nickels stolen. Express packages were also rifled.

So far all attempts to run down the thleves have proved fruitless. The railroad detectives who are working on the case refuse to give any information.
